Tomorrow's Great Edition Is Calculated to Please All Who See It.

Congress wants to do something to honor Lincoln on the centennial anniversary of his birth, February 12, 1369. An opportunity is offered. Although in two days, the ninety-eighth anniversary will have arrived, Congress has not even bought the rare collection of Lincolniana, now preserved in the house on Tenth street northwest, in which the martyred President died. The Government owns only the building. The custodian, Mr. Oldroyd, hopes to have the Government build fireproof walls about the present building and erect two new structures on the rear of the lot. It is a strange fact that visitors to Washington and even Washingtonians themselves seem to lack interest in this the rares, and biggest collection ever made relating to one human being. made relating to one human being. Sunday's magazine section of The Times presents the facts.

Scholars in Dancing Give Fairy Spectacle

"The Sleeping Beauty" Admirably Presented at the Belasco by Pupils of Miss Hawke, Doing Themselves Credit.

The stage of the Belasco Theater was turned into a veritable fairyland yesterday when the pupils of Miss Minnle E. Hawke gave the old legend of "The Sleeping Beauty." Brilliant electric lights, attractive stage settings and the lights attractive stage settings and the usual accessories which one has long believed to be a part of the fairy world were there in abundance. Cupids flew about the stage, witches cast their magic spell over the little dancers and the good fairies that revolutionized things yesterlay afternoon could not be counted.

Dozens of attractive little dancers participated in the exhibition and the theater was filled with an enthusiastic audience that appreciated every feature of the program.

Princess Beauty, the principal character in "The Sleeping Beauty," was played by Miss Mildred De Hart, who
